WAGON-BOX LIFTER. A Simple Device That Saves Lots of Backache and Temper. Below is a description, with cuts, of a wagon-box lifter that we have had in use for ten years. In that time it has paid for itself several times over in the saving of backaches and temper. I think Figs. 1 and 2 will make its construction plain. Fig. 1 shows the frame, or a portion of it, of the wagon shed and corn crib, with apparatus in place, and the wagon-box lifted part way. Fig. 2 shows the roller and drum, with ropes in place, detached. The first thing we did was to spike (or bolt) two joists to the rafters as shown at L Fig. 1, and far enough between them to take a roller as long, at least, as the wagon-box, Fig. 2. Then we made a roller of 4x4 oak, leaving it roller and drove in each hole a round iron pin for a gudgeon. Then by cutting a notch in the pieces L (as at K, Fig. 1), the roller was placed in posi-

The drum is 15 inches in diameter and 8 inches long, with flanges 3 inches deep

The ropes C and B., Fig. 2, are % inch and are wound around the roller the same direction and are long enough to reach to the ground. The lower ends of the rope are attached to large rings as shown at D, Fig. 1. To these rings are attached two other ropes that go around the wagon-box; one end of each of these ropes has a hook attached. Around the drum is wound a 1/2-inch rope, but, of course, in the opposite direction to the ropes C and B, so that when the rope on the drum unwinds the other two wind up. The rope on the drum passes over a pulley B, Fig. 1, then down the side of the wall to the roller I, placed at a suitable height for winding while standing on the ground. The pins, X, work loosely through the roller I, and have knobs on each end to prevent them from dropping out.

After you have everything in place, drive your wagon under the roller, place the ropes under each end of wagon-box, and begin winding the roller I, on the nailing ties on each side of shed, to prevent any danger of the box falling. A careful examination of the two cuts will make all this plain .- C. L. Reamer, in Ohio Farmer.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

With good roads the farmer will have The cost of keeping a good animal is Douglas II. Smith, a better choice of markets.

little more than a poor one. Save all of the wood ashes. They make a good fertilizer for small fruits or potatoes. Keep the manure hauled out during the winter, applying on the field where it is most needed. The more a milch cow will assimilate in excess of what is required for maintenance the better.

Cleanliness is as essential as shelter and food. Stock will not eat wet fodder to an advantage. No matter how good a pedigree an animal may have, individual merit and good conditions are essential.

The principal advantage in using salt us a fertilizer is that it helps to make plant food in the air available. With quite a number of farm products, low prices are caused not so much by overproduction as by poor quality.

With fattening hogs, allowing food to remain within reach after the appetite is satisfied injures the digestion and depreases thrift.-Farmers' Union.

Needs Careful Investigation. Dealing in "futures" is a system that should be carefully investigated by congress. Some maintain that it is an advantage to farmers, while others as sert that it depresses prices while products are held by the producers, the rise In prices going to a class which simply fleposit certain sums as wagers on tha results. There is no doubt, however, as 11.40 a. m. daily and 8.51 a. m. daily ex long as the system exists there will continue to be an uncertainty in prices, and that the farmer will be compelled to suffer all the losses, but will not share in the profits. Much of the business done by the manipulators of wheat and other grains is not based on the articles at all, as it frequently happens that more grain is sold than exists in the whole country.-Colman's Rural World.

WHY LEAVE THE FARM?

A Sensible Talk for Boys Who Do Not

Like Agricultural Life. A great many people are wanting to get away from the farm because farming has ceased to be very remunerative. But if they flee to town or to the city, hoping to find more remunerative employment, they are certain to be disappointed. The city is full of idle bookkeepers, and would-be clerks and helpers of all descriptions. For every vacancy that occurs 20 men stand ready to fill it, and that at a salary that v not admit of much, if any, surplus after living expenses are paid. For the man even well qualified for positions in the NORFOLK & WESTERN RAILROAD bity, the prospect at present is gloomy, as there are no vacancies. But for the man unqualified by way of education and special training there is at present no promise whatever of fat jobs in the Agent, or to

There is no reason why a boy raised on the farm should make a farmer, if he has no taste for farm life. But beforestarting out into the world, he must DOUGLAS H. mean the ultimate downtant or the cities if people should cease to leave the farm. But before leaving the farm, be sure you know what you want, and that by reason of special fitness there is a reasonable certainty of attainng the desired end. If anyone leaves the farm under the impression that there are many advantages in the city not found on the farm, he will discover later that the advantages of city life are greatly overestimated, and that the ndvantages of farm life have been underestimated. Don't be discouraged, we believe that agriculture is destined to
